Excerpt: . . . plainly predestined to fail, And one. we must own, ses roe deserving to win. And so he has smashed up a shining success, And got himself into a deuce of a mess. So various voices! And this was the oar They triumphantly won from a great rival orew; The cool-headed, steady-nerved Stroke, bound to score; The fellow who funking or failure neer knew. He hurry, or falter, catch crabs, miss, or muff No, no; lesser men might--say, Gl-dst-ne or Sm-th--But he was not made of such common-place stuff, His nerve was all steel, and his muscle all pith. And now hes adrift amidst snags, stumps, and rocks, And the Coxswain has just lost his rudder--poor Cox. ! And dangers ahead, and the fall of theweir Sounds close, as that Stroke tumbles head over tip. No wonder poor Bow, his oar bladeless, looks queer. No...
